

Panel Book: KnowledgePanel® Brings You A Probability-Based Online Sample

Rigor and Expertise

Rigor:

Ipsos provides the highest quality online samples to the research community, backed by experts in survey research methods who work closely with our clients throughout the field period and data delivery. Relying on rigorous statistical methodologies and probability-based samples, survey results from KnowledgePanel® are often used for government and academic research purposes and publications in peer-reviewed journals. KnowledgePanel® is the largest online panel that is representative of the U.S. population. KnowledgePanel® recruitment employs an addressed-based sampling methodology from the United States Postal Service's Delivery Sequence File—a database with full coverage of all delivery points in the U.S. As such, samples from KnowledgePanel® cover all households regardless of their phone status. Member households without Internet access are furnished with a free computing device and Internet service.

One of the unique features of KnowledgePanel® that provides a powerful tool for probability-based sample surveys of rare subgroups is a rich battery of profile data for all 60,000 recruited panel members. These data are obtained from an in-depth Demographic Profile survey and a dozen Topical Profile surveys panel members take once recruited. The availability of such detailed profile data for all panel members provides a cost-effective alternative for selecting representative samples from low-incidence populations based on geodemographic, behavioral, and attitudinal indicators.

Expertise:

By all measures—clients, services, professionals, and industry recognition—Ipsos is a leading research organization. Relying on an impressive cadre of seasoned statisticians and survey research scientists, our tried and proven methodologies are supported by an organizationally mandated quest to remain at the cutting edge of relevant technologies. Our experts have successfully transitioned a myriad of survey and market research projects from phone and mail modalities to online data collection via KnowledgePanel®. These include long-term longitudinal and tracking surveys with complex reporting needs.
